

so rough and the ground so rocky. Johan's father was the first to leave the village to go to the city to study at university which made him proud but also a little sad to have left them all behind.

They left their house early in the morning, so early that the sun wasn't up yet and the suburb they lived in was completely quite and the streets were bare. The excitement began to build for Johan and he couldn't wait to see where they were going. He kept asking his father hundreds of questions about what he might see and if it would be difficult. His father told him not to worry and to think more about meeting his relatives and having the chance to see how he had grown up.

At the end of the final match of the season the team all grouped together in the centre circle and joined arms. They had won their final match, but it was the toughest game they had ever played. Nobody understood how it was so difficult or why they had struggled to beat the far inferior team to their own. They knew this team well and know that they were not as good as they had appeared to be that day.

Their coach came and joined them and although they all knew he was happy they had won, he seemed concerned. When he began to speak he seemed very angry. "What is going on guys? You nearly lost that and although you would have still won the league it would have been really shocking if you had not." The players stood there and said nothing. They hadn't expected the coach to be so negative. They had won the match and won the league that day and they should be celebrating.

When the players dispersed and went back to the changing rooms they were all talking to each other about what the coach had said. Nobody felt that they hadn't tried hard, in fact a couple of players had tried so hard they were more tired now than they ever had been. They got back to the changing rooms and continued to discuss what their coach had said.

The captain of the team sat with his head in his hands and suddenly jumped up. "I know what the problem with the coach is." The team all stood around wondering what he thought but nobody said anything. "The coach thinks we didn't try hard enough - well he is wrong. We did what we needed to do although we didn't play as well as we can we still did enough. He
